

David A. Lloyd, M.Sc., P.Ag.

David is CEO/Registrar of the Alberta Institute of Agrologists (AIA). He has arrived at this position after 28 years with the Alberta government in two departments and five years of environmental consulting. He started government work as a resource planner writing land use plans. He progressed to managing reclamation activities throughout Alberta for the Public Lands Division, Alberta Sustainable Resource Development (ASRD). Following this field focused work, David went on to managing oil and gas and industrial activities for Public Lands, ASRD. David then became the Branch Head, Field Services, Land Reclamation Division, Alberta Environment (AENV) and progressed to Regional Director, Parkland Region, Alberta Environment. He finished his government career as a Senior Policy Advisor in Edmonton for AENV corporate head office. Following his government experience, David worked for various environmental consulting companies on reclamation activities, predevelopment assessments, conservation and reclamation plans and phase I and II work. David has served on many boards and committees. He is currently the chair of Alberta's Joint Environmental Professional Practice Board, a board that reviews issues around competency for remediation and reclamation practitioners in Alberta. He has represented the Alberta Chamber of Resources, mining sector, on Alberta Environment's Water For Life Advisory committees. He served three years as the AIA President and Council Chair for the Alberta Institute of Agrologists. In his current role as CEO and Registrar, David has a passion to drive the Institute toward a stronger and more influential body of competent professionals, well recognized in Alberta and Canada, for all matters relating to Agrology. David has a bachelor's degree in Forest Management and Hydrology and a Master's degree in soils, both from the University of British Columbia.
